I used `htmltest.email` to send my email campaign to multiple email clients. Since this website only allowed pasting the raw HTML directly into the browser, I needed to first replace all of the relative paths to the images with direct URLs to the GitHub-hosted images.

The live preview that this website provides shows that the email campaign generally renders well and looks exactly as expected from running the site locally. Rendering on the different email clients, however, shows different results.

Live Preview:

1) Gmail

On Gmail, none of the animations work. The email generally appears exactly as in the live preview, with one notable exception: the panels do not work, and the text that is meant to appear on toggle does not show up at all; on hover over the labels, the cursor does not change to a pointer (but it does turn to a pointer for the button). All links work and images appear as in the live preview. None of the footer links are underlined. According to caniemail.com, this is because Gmail does not support `:checked` and `keyframes`.

On mobile, the same behavior as on desktop is shown; the desired stacking behavior also appears.

2) Yahoo

On Yahoo, the email appears exactly as in the live preview. However, none of the animations work, and I am unable to toggle from one panel to the next (I can see only the text for panel 1). All links do work, but none of the footer links retain their underline. Hover behavior (e.g. cursor changing to pointer on the panel labels) works as expected. According to caniemail.com, this is because Yahoo has support for `:hover` and `:checked` but not animation.

On mobile, it is the same behavior as above, except with the desired stacking behavior and with the desired link-underline.

3) Outlook

On Outlook, the email campaign again looks very similar to the live preview. All links work and are underlined as desired. However, the panels are already auto-expanded rather than only showing the checked one, and the related labels have lost their styling and appear as plain text. The button does not change color on hover. According to caniemail.com, this is because Outlook does not support animations, or :checked or :hover on non-type selectors.
